INT MEDICAL CLINIC

A DOCTOR in a lab coat is in an exam room. He points to a chart of the nervous system on the wall while a PATIENT looks on.

DOCTOR

OK, so here are the points that are causing your pain. I'll give you an anti-inflammatory, and the pain should go away in a couple of days.

NARRATOR

You know your medical charts, you know the diagnosis, and you know the treatment to prescribe. But what about the pain points in your own practice?

The camera zooms into the nervous system chart which morphs into a different chart: A similar chart showing an EMR/EHR system screen shot, an accounting ledger screen shot, a group of the staff of the practice (e.g. nurses), a doctor, a young hip patient, an elderly patient and the medical practice software screen. The "nerves" between these elements are red and inflamed.

Each element zooms larger as the NARRATOR talks about it.

Lets look at the symptoms of your pain.
- revenue is sometimes unpredictable and your patients don't always pay in a timely manner. Your billing system requires a lot of manual work and data entry. - Some of your elderly or non-technical patients can't use your website, but some of your younger and technically savvy patients want billing and everything else online in an easy-to-use app or website. Patients on either end of this spectrum are disengaged and unsatisfied. - Your staff are often tied up with busywork, contacting patients, updating records, and following up on lots of details. This is a waste of labor hours as well as money.

- Worst of all, the software that you obtained to make your practice run smoothly actually creates more work! The software doesn't play well with your EHR/EMR system, requiring more data entry, and the software is rigid and not very customizable, forcing your staff to adapt to the way the software wants to do things, and not the way you do!

The perfect prescription for you pain is now available: The Company System.

A functional diagram of Product functions now appears besides the "nervous system" chart. As the narrator talks about each point, the Product function graphic from the chart flies over to the relevant nerve, and turns the nerve from inflamed to normal.

NARRATOR

Product is the AI Digital Front Door of the Future, that removes pain for your staff and your patients. - The integrated payment system with automated notification provides the easy online billing that patients want, and increases the timeliness with which payments are received. Notifications are largely automated, requiring less staff oversight. - Product's natural language phone system makes it easy for non-technical patients to access appointments, prescriptions and lab results. The built-in Omnichannel communication: phone, SMS, telemedicine, email and web or app access, makes contacts a breeze. Patients can access all of their services through the web or on a phone app, leading to greater engagement and satisfaction. - Product not only makes it easy to contact your patients and partners in multiple ways, it also talks to your EHR or EMR system.

You can avoid the wasted labor hours of paper forms and manual data entry as well as the errors that creep in. Your staff is freed to concentrate on essential tasks for your practice. - Best of all, Product is customizable and fits your practice the way you already do things. No more changing your workflow to fit the system...the system fits to you!...and this eliminates spending extra time to learn one more system. And Product is more affordable than many other less functional systems.

The camera zooms out as the chart morphs back to an anatomical nerve chart, and then fades to a page with the company logo and contact information.
